THE GORGEOUS CIRCUS PARADE.

THIS YEAR IN THE DAYTIME AND THE CHILDREN FULLY APPRECIATED IT.

The latest thing in spring fashions for circus parades was exhibited to an admiring public yesterday morning. The order having gone forth from Washington that no effice-holding "chestnuts" need apply this year, Messrs. Larnum & Bailey also resolved to have a new deal, and substitute a morning parade for the usual pageant by gaslight, which opens up the circus season. This was a great thing for the children, who have to go to bed carly, and for the " Sleeping afternoon papers, besides relieving the Beauty" and her suite from the annoyance of being pelted under cover of night with chunks of coal by over-enthusiastic subjects of her Eastern provinces.

The parade was to start from Madison Square Garden at 9 o'clock, "weather permitting." The weather signified its permission by turning out a beautiful spring day, which could not have been improved upon if manufactured by the circus propertyman himself. Down Madison ave. to Twenty-third-st. the long string of charlots and cayly caparisoned horses trailed, in all the glory of gold and silver, the bright March sunlight glioting from polished armor and fresh varnish. From that point the route lay down Twenty-third-st., to First-ave., up First-ave. to Fifty-nin's-st., along this thoroughfare to Broadway, and thence down Broadway to Twentythird-st., through Fifth-ave. to Fourteenth-st., to Fourth-ave., to the Bowery, thence by way of Grand and Centre Eighth-ave, and Twenty-seventh-st., to the Garden.

There were red-coated fox hunters and expert horsewomen in the van, and under their escort came the open cages containing various happy families of lions, tigers, leopards, bears and hyenas, each with its trainer sitting quietly in the cage, armed only with a short whip and protected by a uniform of gittering immitation steel and an air of great dignity. R. H. Dockerill, mounted on an English hunter, acted as admiral of the fleet of "living tableaus," which included scenes from all the interesting chapters of American history, from the landing of the Pilgrims topher Heiser, C. Wayne Wilson and E. J. Genegan, A supper was served after the entertainment. ,

MUSIC.

TINEL'S "ST. FRANCIS." The Oratorio Society placed an exceedingly creditable achievement to its credit last night when it produced a novel work by a comparatively unknown Edgar Tinel's oratorio, "St. Francis spoken at some length, but the occasion proved to be one which would justify much more extended comment if the exigencies of time and space per-mitted. The oratorio is a work of singular merit, full of originality in conception, so dramatic at times as to carry the fancy captive, rich in delineation of meeds, masterly in its exhibition of the technics of composition and exceedingly during in its employment of effects, both vocal and instrumental. It is, however, exceedingly difficult and sacrifices the majority of its charms to even a mediocre performance. The last full private rehearsal on Thursday afternoon, and the public rehearsal on Friday made a demonstration of this fact, which was most convincing. heard the work on these occasions can have no idea of its interesting character. Tinel, is thoroughly modern in his conception of the mission and capacity of muric. He has had the advantage of a thoroughly unconventional text, and has blended the dramatic principle, which once was supposed to belong wholly to the drama, with the epical which custom had s apart for the oratorio. His melodies are perhaps less remarkable for ther spontaneity and un qualified beauty than his treatment of them is for ingenuity. and expressiveness; but his harmonics are striking in the extreme, and his orchestra has an eloquence that suggests the master. The work is laid out on a logical plan which must be set down as the fruit riper reflection, yet the plan does not force itself upon the notice to the exclusion of naive enjoyment. Outside of the first part of the work, which treats of the early life of the Saint and is secular to the verge of the operatic style (think of of the greater portion of the music, this simplicity of enjoyment is reserved for the climaxes of the work. which are settings of three hymns attributed to st. Francis and interesting in being among the earliest of such at-tempts at versification; but for listenergifted with the faculty of analysis there is scarcely a page of the score which does not irritate attention.
"St. Francis" is one of the few works of its kind which utilize the system of typical phrases. The chief of these phrases Tinel associates, very logically, with that virtue which was first in the estimation of the Saint-poverty. It plays an important role in the ballad of the first part in which St. Francis sings of Poverty as if she were a damsel held captive by a giant and rescued by a gallant knlight; also in the symn to Dame Poverty which he sings after having founded his religious order; and it is the theme of distinctively religious and churchly as that of the first is secular, and here the special training and taste of Tinel, the church composer, shows itself. Most of the choral effects are superb, and there is surprisingly little of the commonplace to be found in them. "St. Francis" ought to be heard several times, and heard nderstandingly, if its merits are to be appreciated, but it was gratifying to observe last night that most of its beauties found quick appreciation. The applause of the public was frequently bestowed, and it was always exceedingly cordial. It was a discriminating audience, moreover, as Mr. Eriessen Bushnell bad occasion to learn, for he was henored far beyond the other singers, simply because of the lovely finish with which he sang an unaccompanied passage in the with which he sang an unaccompanied passage in the first part—the address of the watchman to a departing company of reveilers. Madam De Vere Sopio and Mr. kieger also won green and fragrant laurely for the admirable manner in which they acquitted themselves of an ordinant task. The fourth solo singer was Mr. Charles keyser, whose ald was efficient if not remarkable for refinement of style. Mr. Damrosch must not be forcotten in the distribution of credit and praise. He has distinguished himself again almost as much as he did with the production of the Grell mass.

PADEREWSKI'S FIFTH RECITAL.

Mr. Paderewski played before an audience of the usual size and amiability at the Music Hall yesterday afternoon. It was his fifth recital and seventh public appearance in New-York this season. The ror its this is the scheme of the second recital of the series. The Beethoven sonata was the same—the one in D major, op. 28, which has been dubbed the "Pastoral—so were the two show recess placed in Pastoral—so were the two shows recess placed in Pastoral—so were the two show the groundlings-the wretched fantasia by Liszt on themes from Mendelssohn's " Midsummernight's Dream ical portrait of George Sand. other numbers were Pach's chromatic fantasia and fugue, Scarlatti's pastorale and capriccie, which figured on last year's programmes, the usual set of Chopin pieces and his own nocturne. Since the King can do no wrong, it would perhaps be churlish as well as idle to cavil at M. Paderewski's persistent disregard of the right of the public to know in advance want he intends to play. The matter will bring its own revenge in time. It long ago subjected him to the criticism that his mofive was simply to conceal the paucity of his list. Last season "Valse, Chopin," meant the waitz in Csharp minor; this year it means that in A flat. Such a precedure, of course, enables him to display his virtuosoship at its best, but it is grievously disappointing to those of his admirers who would like to study the real scope of his powers as an interpreter of the masters in composition. Concerning the manner in which he played yesterday's list nothing can be spoken except praise of the loftlest idnd. He seemed to be pardicularly well disposed in every respect, and he held his listeners as in a trance.

SEVENTH REGIMENT CLUB DINNER.

AN ENJOYABLE AFFAIR - SOME OF THE

Jollity and good fellowship were the presiding detties at the annual dinner of the Seventh Regiment Veteran Club last night, and all the guests worshipped at their shrines with unreserved devotion. was one spot on the sun which shone over the assemblage, and that was the fact that the dininghall was too small to accommodate more than half a hundred of the coo members of the club. Still, those present comforted themselves with the proverb about valuable gods coming in small parcels, and obeyed the injunction "Let joy be unconfined," and it was unconfined. The club has been in existence only a few years, but it has flourished like the green bay tree. Lately the governors have leased the southeast corner of Fifth ave, and Flifty eighth-st., and part of the Jones marble block, and in this they be-Heve they have the most desirable club site in town. The committee of arrangements last night consisted of Henry V. Keep, Walter H. Sandt and E. C. An-That they had done their duty well, and better than well, was the unanimous verdict, and a toast to them was drunk standing and with a hearty good will.

The attair was entirely informal. There were no set toasts, but a number of those present said what was uppermost in their minds. Colonel Locke W. Winchester, president of the club, sat at the head of the flower-bedecked table and made a bright speech. Others who spoke were John Oakey, Frederick A. Goodwin, General Ferdinand P. Earle, Lieutenant H. C. Du Val, E. G. Arthur, H. I. Hayden, E. A. Quintard, B. F. Dos Pessos, Arthur Taylor and W. F. Wall. Others present were: A. Garrison, F. R. Ware, A. H. Timpson, C. B. It was altogether one of the best nights the club has had since its opening. It is announced that the club will without doubt continue its operations next season, but where is not yet decided. The buil started off and one-half of the time the boy was in the air. As he was rounting a fence another little boy shouted: 'Say, Eph, whar you geine?' # RIOTOUS BROOKLYN STRIKERS.

THEY ATTACK NON-UNION MEN AND FIGHT

WITH POLICEMEN. It was expected yesterday that the 5,000 employes in the Williamsburg sugar refineries would go on strike out of sympathy for the striking longshoremen who are employed by Port Warden scott. Although the men did not join the strikers, as anticipated, they will in all probability do so to-moriow. All day the police of the Bedford-ave, and other police stations patrified the streets near the works. The strikers ere orderly throughout the day, but a few moment before the time of the non-union men who have filled the places of the strikers to quit work they became hoisterons, and many loud threats of vicience were expressed. so threatening were the remark that the police at once summoned additional help. As the non-union men filed cut from the piers the strikers made an attack upon them. The police who were ready for the emergency, drew their clubs and took a hand. The fight was a bitter one, and many of the strikers were hadly clubbed by the police. Two of the men were placed under arrest after being clubbed almost into insensibility. The injured men were James P. Powers, of No. 646 Wythe-ave., and Patrick Welsh, of No. 56 Clymer-st. After their wounds had been dressed they were locked up.

At the time of the attack Port Warden Scott was in his office, which is near the wharf. He saw the non-union men come from the plers, and when they reached Kent-ave. Powers, who was standing among a group of the strikers, stepped forward and dealt one of the men a terrific nlow in the face. It knocked the man down, and as he lay on the sidewalk Powers kicked him about the body. When a number of the essentes of the injured man went to his rescue Power at once struck another one. This was a signal for at once struck another one. This was a signal for the strikers, who tashed to the assistance of Fowers, and a general fight followed. Several policemen who soon arrived with drawn cuts were compelled to use them freely before the trouble was over. The strik-ers were then driven away and the non-union men escorted to their homes.

Last right it was said that a committee of the strikers had been appointed to wait upon Theodore A. Havemeyer to ask him to settle the strike.

UNIVERSITY CLUB OFFICERS ELECTED.

There were no independent or opposition cardidates the election of the University Club last night. The meeting was most harmonious. The following regular candidates for members of the council to serve until March, 1897, were elected: Charles C. Beaman, George W. Dillaway, Arthur M. Dodge, Loy-all Farragut and H. Walter Webb. The constitution was amended by raising the limit of resident mem-bers from 1,100 to ',200. There was some dis-cussion on the question of the club removing to a new house, but the members of the council present said that the subject was under consideration; so the club by a large majority voted to leave it in the hands of the council.
